

Institute for Women and Art at Rutgers

Newly established in 2006, the Institute for Women & Art brings together Rutgers' faculty, curators, researchers and artists to promote the study of women and art. The Institute supports and sponsors scholarship, research, exhibitions and programming on topics pertaining to women in art, including attention to past inequities, and promotes the transformation of policies, institutions, attitudes and social structures. It acts as a catalyst for creating an intellectual community among scholars and practitioners associated with Rutgers University and cooperates with other feminist, leadership and visual arts organizations. The Institute for Women and Art advances the development of Rutgers University as an internationally-known center for the study of women and art.
