Rutgers had its reaccreditation visit from March 29 through April 1, 1998.

Rutgers, The State University of New Jersey, is accredited by the Commission on Higher Education of the Middle States Association of Colleges and Schools. The University has been accredited by Middle States since 1921. This accreditation is for the institution as a whole rather than for a specific academic program or school. Every ten years the University undertakes a self-study indicating the ways in which it fulfills its mission within the context of the standards of the Middle States Association. Following the submission of the self-study, a team of peers, selected by the Commission on Higher Education, conducts a site visit and then makes a formal set of recommendations concerning the findings of its visit.
