

Transforming Undergraduate Education

Rutgers has transformed undergraduate education at its largest campus with a dramatic reshaping of academics and student life.

New and returning students to Rutgers–New Brunswick will benefit from a multitude of changes:

- A single liberal arts school, the School of Arts and Sciences, now serves new arts and sciences undergraduates at Rutgers–New Brunswick.
- Students wishing to live on campus can choose among residence halls on the Busch, College Avenue, Cook, Douglass, or Livingston campuses—and even switch campuses from year to year.
- First-year seminars on topics such as the African immigrant experience and alternative energy will forge strong bonds between students and professors, engaging undergraduates in the intellectual life of a great public research university.
- Arts and sciences students will be served by Academic Advising Centers on each of the campuses at Rutgers–New Brunswick.
- The Douglass Residential College will provide women at Rutgers with a small, close-knit community focusing on women’s leadership.
- Improved student services, a campuswide honors program, and “discovery houses” on the Livingston Campus will enrich the student experience for Rutgers undergraduates.

And how will the transformation affect you? Here’s the spot to find answers and resources about the changes at Rutgers–New Brunswick.
